Through PSYCHIATRY: JOURNAL FOR THE STUDY OF INTERPERSONAL PROCESSES, The William Alanson White Psychiatric Foundation seeks to communicate the growing insights of psychiatry, the study of interpersonal relations, to a wide audience of those who can make valid contributions to the data of psychiatry and correct use of its formulations. The journal is addressed not alone to psychiatrists and psychiatric research personnel in the narrower sense but to all serious students of human living in any of its aspects and to those who must meet pressing social needs with current remedial attempts. Its editorial policy seeks to encourage mutual understanding throughout this large field. The journal is designed to present authoritative treatises, reports, surveys, reviews, and abstracts pertaining to psychiatry as a basic orienting discipline relevant to all significant phases and problems of human life and to all human relations; this includes clinical psychiatric material, pertinent biological and social science contributions and occasional philosophical presentations. The Foundation, its Trustees, and the Editor can accept no responsibility for any statements of fact or opinion made by the contributors.
